Report Explores Migratory Effects on Latinos’ Health

Many Latino immigrants eat less healthy foods after they move to the U.S., according to a report (http://spb.berkeley.edu/forum-launches-binational-health-week) from UC-Berkeley’s Health Initiative of the Americas. Meanwhile, about one-third of adult Mexican immigrants diagnosed with diabetes are uninsured, according to the report.

"Study Examines Economic Impact of Latino Health Issues (http://audio.californiareport.org/archive/R201510050850/a)" (Jhatvala Romero, California Report, 10/5).

This is part of the California Healthline Daily Edition, a summary of health policy coverage from major news organizations. Sign up for an email subscription (/email-signup/).